מַאן דְאָמַר הֲלֶּכֶה כְרַבִּי מֵאִיר דְּרְשִׁינֵן לַה בְּפִירְקָא. מַאן דְאָמַר מִנָהַג מִידְרָשׁ לַא דָרִשִׁינַן, אוֹרוֹיֵי MISHNA: At three times in the year priests raise their hands to recite the Priestly Benediction four times in a single day, in the morning prayer, in the additional prayer, in the afternoon prayer, and in the evening in the closing of the gates, i.e., the ne'ila prayer. And these are the three times: During communal fasts held due to lack of rain, on which the closing prayer is recited; and during non-priestly watches [ma'amadot], when the Israelite members of the guard parallel to the priestly watch come and read the act of Creation from the Torah, as explained below; and on Yom Kippur...

GEMARA: The mishna taught. At three times in the year priests raise their hands to recite the Priestly Benediction four times in a single day. On communal fasts, non-priestly watches, and Yom Kippur. The Gemara asks. How do they recite the Priestly Benediction four times on these days? Do fast days and gatherings of non-priestly watches have an additional prayer? The Gemara explains that the mishna is incomplete and is teaching the following: At three times in the year priests raise their hands each time they pray, and on some of these they bless four times a day, in the morning prayer, in the additional prayer, in the afternoon prayer, and in the closing of the gates, i.e., the ne'ila prayer. And these are the three times: Communal fasts, non-priestly watches, and Yom Kippur.

Rav Naḥman said that Rabba bar Avuh said: This mishna is the statement of Rabbi Meir. However, the Rabbis say: The morning prayer and the additional prayer have the Priestly Benediction of the raising of the hands, whereas the afternoon prayer and the closing prayer [ne'ila] do not have the raising of the hands.

The Gemara asks: Who are these Rabbis, who disagree with Rabbi Meir? It is the opinion of Rabbi Yehuda, as it is taught in a baraita: The morning prayer, the additional prayer, the afternoon prayer, and ne'ila all have the Priestly Benediction of the raising of the hands. This is the statement of Rabbi Meir. Rabbi Yehuda says: The morning prayer and the additional prayer have the raising of the hands, whereas the afternoon prayer and ne'ila do not have the raising of the hands. Rabbi Yosei says: Ne'ila has the raising of the hands; the afternoon prayer does not have the raising of the hands.

The Gemara asks: With regard to what principle do they disagree? Rabbi Meir maintains: What is the reason that priests do not spread their hands to bless the people every day in the afternoon prayer? It is due to potential drunkenness, as people occasionally become intoxicated during their lunch, and it is prohibited for an inebriated priest to bless. However, now, on a fast day, there is no concern about drunkenness, and therefore the priests may recite the Priestly Benediction even in the afternoon prayer.

Conversely, Rabbi Yehuda maintains that with regard to the morning prayer and the additional prayer, when drunkenness is not common on every ordinary day, the Sages did not issue a decree that the Priestly Benediction be omitted during them. However, with regard to the afternoon prayer and ne'ila, when drunkenness is common on every day, the Sages issued a decree that the Priestly Benediction should not be recited during them, despite the fact that intoxication is not a concern on a fast day.

Finally, Rabbi Yosei maintains that with regard to the afternoon prayer, which is recited every day, the Sages issued a decree concerning it, whereas with regard to ne'ila, which is not recited every day, the Sages did not issue and apply their decree to it, as there is no concern that people might become confused between ne'ila and an afternoon prayer of a regular weekday.

Rav Yehuda said that Rav said: The halakha is in accordance with the opinion of Rabbi Meir. And Rabbi Yochnan said: The people act in accordance with the opinion of Rabbi Meir. And Rava said: The custom is in accordance with the opinion of Rabbi Meir.

The Gemara clarifies these statements. The one who said that the halakha is in accordance with the opinion of Rabbi Meir means that this ruling is taught in the public lectures on Shabbat. The one who said that the custom is in accordance with the opinion of Rabbi Meir means that one does not teach this in public, but if someone comes to ask for מוֹבֵינַן. ומַאן דְאָמֵר נָהֲגוֹ אוֹרוֹנֵי לָא מוֹבִינַן, וְאִי עָבֵיד עָבֵיד, וְלָא מַהַדרינַן לֵיה. a practical ruling, one instructs them in private that this is the halakha. And the one who said that the people act in accordance with the opinion of Rabbi Meir means that one does not even instruct someone that this is the halakha, but if he acts in accordance with Rabbi Meir, he has acted in a valid manner and we do not require him to return and recite the prayer again.

ּוְרֵב נַחְמֶן אָמֵר: הֲלָכָּח כְּרֵבִּי יוֹמֵי. טַּעְמָא פָּרְשִׁי כָּחְנֵי יְדַיְיחוּ בְּמִנְחֲתָא דְתַעְנִיתָא: כֵּיוָן דְּבְסְמוּךְּ לִשְׁקִיעַת הַחַמָּח קָא פָּרְשִׁי — כִּתְכִּילַת נְעִילָח

דַּמְיָא.

And Rav Nachman said that the halakha is in accordance with the opinion of Rabbi Yosei. The Gemara concludes: And indeed, the halakha is in accordance with the opinion of Rabbi Yosei. The Gemara asks: And nowadays, what is the reason that priests spread their hands to bless the people in the afternoon prayer of a fast? The Gemara explains: Since they spread their hands near sunset, it is considered like ne'ila, and therefore the decree of the Sages does not apply.
